

English website editor/writer for labour rights group in Hong Kong

China Labour Bulletin, a labour rights organization based in Hong Kong, is creating a new position in our media team to oversee the development of our English-language website.

CLB is widely acknowledged as the leading authority on the workers' movement and labour relations in China, and the successful applicant will be responsible for enhancing our ground-breaking coverage of worker activism, work safety, and the impact of China on labour in the Global South.

The main job duties will be:

- Writing and editing news articles and commentaries that keep our international readers up-to-date with important labour issues in China.
- Updating and revising our series of six explainers on workers in China.
- Managing CLB's international social media accounts.
- Working with our Chinese website and social media editors to expand our global reach and develop new media strategies for the organization.

Qualifications:

- You should have a degree in journalism or similar, and experience working in an established media organization.
- You should have a good understanding of social and economic issues in China, as well as Chinese social media. A good knowledge of international labour and trade unionism is a distinct advantage.
- You should have native-level English, a good working knowledge of Chinese, and be able to conduct meetings in Mandarin Chinese.
- You should be available to start work in Hong Kong by mid-February, after the Chinese New Year.

Salary according to experience. CLB offers a wide-range of benefits, including medical insurance and generous annual leave, and is an equal opportunity employer with a strict anti-harassment code.

If you wish to apply for this position, please send an email (subject English website editor) to clbeditor@clb.org.hk with a cover letter, a copy of your CV and two recent examples of your work.